The Welcome Society of Philadelphia will give a reception and tea at the Stanton next Friday afternoon, November 27. The Welcome Society was organized in 1885 by Francis Howard Williams and is composed of the direct descendants of those who came over in the ship Welcome with William Penn in 1682. The society consists of at present about 80 members, and are banded together in order to keep alive the memories of those who braved so much to start this wonderful country of ours. The men are the active members and the ladies associate members of the society. The officers are: Francis Howard Williams, president; Sydney G. Fisher, vice president; G. C. Gillespie, treasurer; James Buckman, secretary.

The council is composed of many members, including James Wistar, R. E. Cook, Richard M. Caldwell and J. B. Colahan.

THE DRAMA

AGNES MARC

"A Pair of Sixes"—Adelphi

FLASHES FROM "STARS" Daniel W. Arthur has engaged Richard Carl for principal comedian with Marie Cahill in the musical play being written for her. Jerome Kern has been commissioned to compose the music.

Arrangements have just been completed whereby Walker Whiteside will return to London next year, where he will again appear in Zangwill's "Melting Pot." After his London engagement in this play he will visit Birmingham, Manchester, Liverpool, Dublin, Glasgow and other provincial cities. Before returning to America he will play a short engagement in London, appearing in a repertoire which will include "The Typhoon," "Mr. Wu," "We Are King" and "Hamlet."

Charles Neville Buck, author of "The Battle Cry," gathered his material for this melodrama of life in the Cumberland Mountains while working as a reporter and cartoonist for the Louisville Evening Post from 1900 to 1903. With Irvin S. Cobb as his colleague, Buck was assigned as special correspondent in Frankfort during the several trials of the Goebel case. This is his first play.

"The New Shylock," by Herman Scheffauer, which was recently acted by Miss Horniman's company at the Manchester Repertory Theatre, is the first American play to be presented at this famous English playhouse. The play's action takes place in the Ghetto of New York, where the author was a settlement worker for two years.

Penrlyn Stanlaw, the artist, and Stanley Olmsted, newspaper writer, have collaborated in a play, "The Wind and the Lamb." The original scenario, prepared by Mr. Stanlaw, was accepted by the late Henry B. Harris. Mr. Stanlaw delayed completion of the work until recently, when he called in Mr. Olmsted.

The Richard Harding Davis-Jules Eckert Goodman play, "The Trap," is to be revived later. Arthur Hammerstein, its producer, yesterday arranged to present the play at either the Republic or Eglantine Theatre, New York, Christmas week. Robert Edson has been engaged for one of the principal roles. The cast will include also Tully Marshall, Orrin Johnson and Elaine Hammerstein.

Miss Louise Dresser, the comedienne and songstress, who is appearing in vaudeville, declares that she much prefers rose bushes to diamonds, vixenaria to amethysts and the shimmer of sunshine on dew kissed blossoms to any number of glittering gems set in the most beautiful designs that jewelers can invent.

"Give me my garden," she says, "and the warm sweetness of spring and summer days."

BROAD—"The Beautiful Adventure," comedy adapted from the French by George Merton, starring Ann Murdock. Immediately before her wedding a bride-to-be elopes—but not with the groom. Brightly, lightly amusing.

FORREST—"Sari," Hungarian operetta, with charmingly catchy music, and, what is exceptional in musical comedy, a real plot, iridescently staged, girls roscally gowned.

GARRICK—"The Debutante," new musical comedy with title book by H. B. and R. E. Smith and music by Victor Herbert. Hazel Dawn is an ever Hazel Dawn, ingenuous, unaffected and lovely.

KEITH'S—Frene Franklin, and a varied bill. LITTLE THEATRE—"Hindle Wakes," by Stanley Houghton. First production in this city of play which created a sensation in London. A girl, having been compromised, refuses to marry, thus challenging the old code and asserting the independence of the new feminism. Splendidly acted.

LYRIC—"The Story of the Rosary," by Walter Howard, a melodrama staged as elaborately as the gingerbread and candy castles of fairy lore, with a battle off stage, artillery and a wife saved from becoming a nun by the timely return of her husband hero.

WALNUT—"Damaged Goods," much disguised play by Eugene Brieux. end the golden languor of all, and I am perfectly happy, for there is nothing in the world, not even a smashing theatrical first night, that gives me greater pleasure than to put on a sunbonnet and a pair of old gloves and with a trowel in my hand set out to spend my day with the little growing things in my garden."

An ambitious young singer recently came for advice to Blanche Duffield, the prima donna. "The young woman lacked nothing in assurance. "I have been studying at home for several years," she told Miss Duffield, "and I have decided to become a prima donna."

"Studying at home?" inquired Miss Duffield. "Why, how could you do that alone?" "Well," explained the young woman, "I put all my spare dimes aside and bought opera records. I have learned to sing by listening to the Metropolitan stars on the phonograph. I know most of the arias from the standard works, although I have never seen the music or the printed words. My friends tell me that I do wonderfully well."

Much surprised at the young woman's statement, Miss Duffield put her to the test. "Did you learn that from the phonograph?" Miss Duffield inquired. "Oh, yes," the would-be prima donna gushed; "it was no trouble at all."

"Well," laughed Miss Duffield, "I don't want to be unnecessarily cruel, but I would strongly advise that you first get an unscratched record and then put a new needle on the diaphragm of your Victrola."

Charles A. Taylor, who will take over Daly's, New York, is Laurette Taylor's former husband, and the manager who gave her professional impetus before she reached Broadway in "The Great John Ganton."
